They will soon be here?

Don't be in a hurry for they will soon surprise you.

J. Eisenmann is just in receipt of a line full of collars and sweat pads.

A communication from Jackrabbit in regard to a marriage was received too late for publication.

Mrs. Wm. Perry left by to-day's stage for Salt Lake where she will join her husband, who is now returning from his extended business trip east.

Some eight or nine men have left town for South Dakota to take up homesteads on the Indian Reservation that has of late been thrown open to settlement.

Information is just at hand that Spiro Dockleitch intends closing his place of business about the last of next month. He is then to turn his undivided attention toward mining.

Some one who had use for a wagon cover appropriated one that belonged to the stage line, last night. Bishop Lee wants the said person to make a good job of it and on his next raid to take the wagon.

The dance given last Tuesday evening at Brown's hall was a huge success. There were only a few in attendance but it was all the more select and those present had a good time; one they will not soon forget. The object aimed at was a pleasant evening.

J. Eisenmann has just received a handsome assortment of silver ware, crockery and glassware. They were selected by Mr. Eisenmann himself and are without a doubt the best ever hauled over the road to Pioche. Don't fail to call and see the fine ornamental clocks.

Andrew Tyson an old timer of Pioche, Silver Reef and the whole western country died Sunday night of supposed heart failure, and the funeral took place on Tuesday from the Pioche Home No. 1. His effects fully covered all expenses of his sickness and funeral.

A way bill that came to Pioche by mistake contained the information that Messrs. Wolley Lund and Judd have just shipped a bar of bullion made in the Christy mill at Silver Reef. The bar weighed 122 lbs and was worth $800. It is probably the result of a final clean up.

R. Martin & Co's new drug store just one door north of the Godde Mer Co's is certainly a credit to the town. The building has been entirely renovated from top to bottom. The outside has practically been rebuilt, while the inside has had a finishing touch of paint and ornamental paper; and the whole effect is brightened by the pleasant countenance of that experienced chemist "Doc" Meeks.

IT WON'T STICK.

Two Italians Endeavor to Play Smarts on Tricks. Leva de Town, Go Kasta Sella Bonana.

At about ten-thirty o'clock today the excited man running here and there, talking to this one and then to that one was Joe Cook, the lively stable man; he was getting some arrangements about papers completed, so that sheriff named Turner and his deputy named Reeves could make use of the horse-flesh being attached to a buggy. The smallest man of the three, who was very cool and put abox of cigars under the seat of the buggy and then climbed in, was Wertheimer; he meant business. They were all alike bent on showing this paper matter to John Scatena and D. Perognato, two Italian men who left the night preceding for parts unknown.

An inquiry developed the information the Italians aforesaid were of short memory, and had forgotten to liquidate Joe Cook to the tune of $240, and Wertheimer another amount that was also worth while remembering. The papers will be shown them wherever they happen to be found and if their purport is not understood, the Italians will return with the Sheriff and his accompanying friends to Pioche, where an interpreter will be found.

WAS IT MURDER?

MALONEY AND McDONALD ORDERED OUT OF JACKRABBIT FOR SUPPRESSING THE FACT OF O'BRIEN'S DEATH.

A DRUNKEN BRAWL

The evidence indicated an Unintended Murder During a Drunken Row And a Desire to Make It Appear as An Accidental. Maloney's Second Story to a Reporter.

Rial City Correspondent.

Late last Wednesday evening, (Feb. 10th) two men named Maloney and McDonald informed Mr. Hazelgrove that they had just found the dead body of James O'Brien in the cabin formerly occupied by him below the company's office. Mr. Hazelgrove, unable to go himself, sent men to the cabin, where the body was found lying at the bottom of a cellar under the cabin floor.

Men were set to watch the body, and the coroner at Pioche was notified, who appeared next day and saying to Mr. Hazelgrove that "I've supposed there were no suspicions of foul play," and receiving the reply, "No I don't suppose there were" from him, ordered the body removed to Pioche for burial, without holding an inquest. The following facts, however, came out at a meeting, held in front of the cabin where Jim O'Brien met his death, on Friday last at noon. At this meeting, which had a presiding officer and was attended by nearly every man in camp, Charles Wyman testified as follows:

"I came off shift Tuesday morning at 3:30 and went with Montgomery and his partner to their cabin and had breakfast. Jim O'Brien lived in the back part of the cabin. When we got there, O'Brien, Maloney and a third person, we didn't know, were in the back room talking loudly. Judging from their conversation they were very drunk. One said something about being a great fighter. We didn't pay much attention to what they said till O'Brien finally said: 'You'd better get out of here;' as he spoke he started across the room. There was a slight scuffle, a crash of broken timber and the sound of a body falling. Then all was still for a moment. Then Maloney began to talk to some one; we didn't know what he said as he talked very low, almost in a whisper. He was standing in the room while talking. Our impression at the time was that O'Brien and Maloney had kicked the stranger out. Presently Maloney and some one else came to the door of the house we were in and called Frank Montgomery out. We didn't hear what they said to him. After talking a moment my impression is that Maloney went back to the room where O'Brien was. Maloney and the man whom we supposed to be O'Brien, went away after a while; didn't notice where they went particularly. Montgomery and myself went out to find the man who we supposed they had fired out, to put him to bed, but could not find him."

Frank Montgomery's testimony was the same as Wyman's, with the addition that when called out by Maloney he had been asked by him to allow the stranger, who appears to have been McDonald, to sleep with him that night, whereupon he shut the cabin door paying no attention to who Maloney's companion was. Also that in the afternoon preceding the finding of the body, Maloney had brought a pipe to Montgomery's cabin and said to him, "Here Frank, here's O'Brien pipe, I wish you'd take it into him." Montgomery replied, "Why don't you take it yourself?" "I haven't got time now," Maloney left the pipe with Montgomery, who said that "if he saw O'Brien he would give it to him."

Maloney, in his own defense, said that he and McDonald had come home with O'Brien that night. All were pretty drunk, I tried to get Jim to go to bed. He got mad at us after awhile and said to McDonald: "Here you s---n of b---s, you'd better get out of here," when we both left and I tried to get Montgomery to let McDonald sleep in his cabin, as he was so drunk I didn't know what to do with him. I was pretty drunk myself. Montgomery wouldn't let him stay and I left him and went back to O'Brien's room. I looked in and didn't hear him around, so I supposed he had gone to bed. I went to my cabin and went to bed."

McDonald said "that he was so drunk that there was actually no impression whatever left upon his mind for several hours. He did not remember anything whatever about being at the place."

This evidence was the last taken. The presiding officer asked those assembled what was their opinion based upon such testimony. Some one then moved that Maloney and McDonald be invited to emigrate to fresher fields and pastures new; at the same time suggesting that were he in their place, he wouldn't wait to be invited.

This motion was seconded, suggestion and all, and unanimously carried. The time allowed them to leave camp being one hour, and the penalty for disobedience or return, being a tar and cedar bark covering. (Feathers are too great a luxury here to use in this way, so we substitute cedar bark, old rope, old papers, etc.) A committee of three was appointed to see that the order was carried out, but their services were not required, as the two laborers had their blankets on their backs and were on the road in twenty-five minutes after receiving the order to leave.

The general opinion here is that the two men sent out of camp are not actually guilty of intention to commit crime, even though they may, in the scuffle with O'Brien, as is supposed, have pushed him through the partition and caused him to fall through the trap door of the cellar and thereby caused his death. Yet of one thing they were guilty, and that is keeping back the fact O'Brien was dead, when according to the evidence given they must have known that he was dead. Trying to get Frank Montgomery to give O'Brien the pipe was a ruse for having him discover O'Brien's body. Failing in this they were obliged to make it known themselves, and in doing so made known this knowledge of the fact that O'Brien was dead before they divulged it.

O'Brien and Maloney were both among those discharged recently for preferring drink to work. O'Brien was a steady man when not drinking and a first-class miner. He was a good sensible honest fellow and not quarrelsome, even when drinking. He had worked in mines all his life, having been in Montana, Colorado, Utah and Nevada in early days. His only fault was the love of liquor, but for which he would have been a most useful member of society.

Alas! poor Jim! A few nights ago we worked together and at supper time, while heating our lunches over a couple of snuffs, told stories of Montana and our lives there, but while no friendly trembling voice was near to offer up a prayer for your soul; while no sisters, wife or mother's kiss was to warm your bleaching lips; no son's nor daughter's hand to tenderly press yours "good by;" not even that of a chance acquaintance to close your sightless eyes when you fell asleep, and denied by Fate the consolation of your religion and the last offices of her priest. Your soul has passed away and you are with us no more. In the Great Beyond, you have gone on a long prospecting trip, and we, whom you leave here, hope that you may strike it rich, Jim, very rich, and that you may be known there for the good you have done and the evil you suppressed and not for the faults you had. And when the final day shall come Jim, with all our sins forgiven, may we meet you there where we shall have no more hard rock, missed holes or "night shift," and join in praising the Great Superintendent of the Universe during our eternal pay day.

The following story told to a reporter here by Maloney, differs slightly from that he was said to have related to the investigating committee at Jackrabbit. He claimed that McDonald and he were in the cabin with O'Brien, McDonald picked a quarrel, and was ordered out by O'Brien, and that he, (Maloney) took O'Brien's part by ejecting McDonald. After this, he said that he tried to get Montgomery to take charge of McDonald, but failing, turned him loose and started for his own sleeping quarters. He said that he never went back again to O'Brien's cabin, but that McDonald might have done so.

In answer to a telephone message that Maloney was here in town, and inquiring if he should arrest him, Supt. of the mine, Hazelgrove replied: "We are satisfied beyond doubt that Maloney and McDonald killed O'Brien accidentally in a scuffle, but while we are perfectly satisfied of this, our evidence is purely circumstantial and would not warrant a conviction in any court of justice. No arrest has been made."

THE NEWS DON'T CON UR

Nor Seem to Know That The State Board Has Already Acted on Lincoln County to the tune of $5,000.

The White Pine News is not in sympathy with the movement to test the legal existence of the State Board of Assessors and Equalization, saying: "We prefer to give the State Board Act a fair show and see what results it will accomplish," but it says in another article in the same paper: "The revenue measures of the last Legislature, which it was hoped would set the State on a better financial footing, have not accomplished the desired end and some other remedy must be evolved and applied."

Lincoln County has given the Board a "fair show," and is out about five thousand dollars, and in statement by the Board that it owes an apology for its arbitrary and wrongful acts.

Arbitrary power is not sanctioned by our form of government, and any law which attempts to give it to any man or set of men, is fundamentally wrong. The instinct of self-protection of the editor of the News seems to be on a parity with that of the miner who persists in having his giant powder in his cooking stove and has no idea of danger until he commences to pick himself together from the tree tops surrounding his demolished cabin.

Notice.

If the party who addressed an envelope to H. E. Freudenthal, and inclosed a note to which he (intentionally) forgot to sign his name, using for the same the printed Letter-head and Envelope of T. E. Edwards, will call at the Rooms of office and make himself known, the detective ingredient which he claims to possess might stand him in good stead.

H. E. FREUDENTHAL.

We are sorry to announce the death of little Gabriel Adlemann the four year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Augustus Adlemann who died last Monday night. The late illness was of only eight hours duration and the sorrowing parents had their baby snatched from their arms. The people of Pioche unite with the bereaved in extending their sympathies to the bereft parents.

FURNACE NOTES.

A new foundation is being laid for the saw mill, which will soon be in operation, thus doing away with all manual labor in the cutting of wood.

Superintendent James' son has had a severe attack of sickness, confining him to bed for several days, but is now convalescent and bids fair for a speedy recovery.

The large pond at the works is now being surrounded by a heavy breast-work of slag, which will give it a durability and prevent any chance of a break in the structure.

The health of the smelter hands taking everything in consideration, has been unusually good during the winter. Very few have had occasion to lose a shift from lead or any other cause.

Francis, Baldwin & Co have leased the Highland Queen and are taking out considerable ore. As this mine is a heavy lead producer it will meet with ready sale at the smelters.

The coke teams for the past few days have succeeded in wallowing through the desert mud and discharged their freight, causing the yard to present its usual appearance of "sufficiency" on hand.

One of our country cousins was shown some mineral wool from the furnaces and was informed it was "the hair of a petri-fied man." He gazed at it with intense astonishment and begged for a little, saying he had heard that it was an infallible remedy for sore eyes.

The little motor has done its harness and runs on the road like a greyhound. It has proved of great service during the bad weather and a decided saving of horse flesh in the transportation of employees and other business in connection with the mines and furnaces.

Thursday evening as the eleven o'clock shift was relieved and the men who had been on from three o'clock were on their way home. Two of them as they approached the culvert on the main road and close to the slaughter house observed what appeared to be a man's head bobbing up and down on the culvert. Upon arriving at the crossing and looking down into the ditch they noticed the form of a man with his back turned towards them. Upon asking what he was doing there at that time of night he answered very gruffly. He was picking up diamonds. What his intentions were it is difficult to determine. That they were no good is beyond doubt. If his intentions was to hold up one of the hands with the expectations of getting booty he had mistaken his calling for as a rule smelter men are a class not to be trifled with which he would have found to his cost. Since the occurrence the men have taken the precaution to be prepared for any such emergency and a like repitition may cost him a perforated hide. The following morning the men going to work found a number of empty shells belonging to a revolver near the culvert which he had evidently taken out the revolver with loaded ones.

A few days ago two of our townsmen went down to a point between the smelter site and town, to practice shooting with their revolvers, and selected a spot for their fun near the road culvert. After enjoying in this sport for sometime they found hidden in the culvert a new wagon sheet, horse blanket, and an old overcoat, which had been carefully hidden away there by someone. There was a suspicion in their minds that the goods had been stolen from town, and they were consequently brought back. The rightful owner can get back his property by calling on Al Enright. The wagon sheet is more than likely the property of A. Werner, that was taken from his mine near the "Alps."

Jack Rabbit Notes

Mr. W. G. Johnston is now running a barber shop in the rear of Cecil Newall's saloon. He is a good workman.

The snow has decreased considerably during the past week and the tramway, and trains to Pioche are now running smoothly.

During an animated conversation between a couple of Italians, one of whom had just arrived in camp, the new arrival was heard to remark: "You no catcha biga fisha Sacramento river, you go to Pioche Nevada you catcha de joba de Jack Rabbit." He had evidently been told by a friend that Tom Williams was still here.

Supt. James accompanied by Mr. J. C. Eames, assistant superintendent, paid the camp a visit during the week. Mr. James returned to Pioche next day after their arrival but Mr. Eames remained until Saturday making a thorough examination of the Day mine. As he has not yet visited the Onondago or Detroit he will probably be here again shortly.

Mrs. Meyers started a boarding house in the old Coleman saloon, recently purchased by Wes Williams, formerly let and already has ten or twelve boarders and from all accounts her prospects are good for now. This makes three boarding houses here now and a fourth will soon start. About ten men are batching Where all the high houses will get their profit from I don't know as there are only thirty five or forty men in camp altogether, but the more the merrier. It's a good thing for the boys, they don't have to kick about poor grub now days.

Your correspondent has been laid up this week with a lame back caused by lifting "too mucha biga bowl," (as his partner expressed it) down on the twenty five. He would like a few more friendly suggestions as to what to do for it.

Died.
